Children, Violence, and Virtual Reality

Ernest Jouriles

Southern Methodist University

Dr. Jouriles is a leading authority on family violence and child functioning. His groundbreaking research on the effects of children's exposure to marital conflict and violence has prompted new theories on how inter-parent conflict influences children. He has also conducted pioneering research on interventions for children in families characterized by frequent and severe intimate partner violence. More recently, he has begun a research program on the prevention of violence in adolescent romantic relationships.

Room: Alamo

“Anabolic steroid abuse by adolescents: what have we learned from animal research?”

Marilyn McGinnis	University of Texas Health Science Center San Antonio
------------------	--

Dr. McGinnis will summarize current findings from her research, which focuses on the effects of anabolic-androgenic steroids (AAS) on the brain and behavior. Since increases in testosterone levels are known to profoundly influence the nervous system during adolescence, chronic exposure to high levels of androgens during pubertal development may produce enduring changes in brain maturation and subsequent behavioral expression. Pubertal rats are used as the animal model to assess effect of AAS on sexual behavior, aggression, serotonin and dendritic spine density. In her talk, the potential impact of these results with regard to AAS abuse in humans will be discussed.

Session: [27]

Chaired by: Lauren Scharff

Room: Crystal Ballroom

Teaching and Learning with the Self in Mind

Don Forsyth

University of Richmond

Dr. Forsyth's talk will address the question "Who am I?" This question is not a puzzling one for humans, whose unique capacity for self-reflection allows them to look inward to review their own qualities and then critique those qualities. Forsyth will explore how the self—and the self's striving for enhancement--both helps and hinders students (and teachers as well) as they strive to achieve their educational goals. Don, a social psychologist, studies reactions to success and failure, leadership, individual differences in moral thought, applications of social psychology in educational and clinical settings, and group dynamics. He is currently the president of APA Division 49, Group Psychology and Group Psychotherapy.

Wrecking the argosy with a rusty nail: Understanding the neural basis of navigation

Gary Muir St. Olaf College

Dr. Muir's research program is guided primarily by questions about the neural mechanisms of spatial cognition and navigation. The firing activity of certain neurons is thought to represent the animal's perceived location ("place" cells) and head direction ("head direction" cells), and he is interested in how the information contained in the firing activity of these cells is used by an animal when solving a spatial task. He is also interested in how learning a spatial task may alter the firing activity of these cells to represent the animal's newly acquired knowledge. Dr. Muir addresses these questions by observing a "behaving" brain in action by recording the activity of single neurons while freely-moving animals perform spatial tasks. His talk will compare directional cells recorded in rats and chinchillas and how the vestibular system contributes to the generation of these spatial neural signals and navigational behavior.

Personality in Everyday Contexts: What Your Stuff Says About You

Sam Gosling University of Texas - Austin

SAM GOSLING, PhD, is an associate professor of psychology at the University of Texas at Austin. He did his doctoral work at the University of California at Berkeley, where his dissertation focused on personality in spotted hyenas. In addition to his animal work he also does research on how human personality is manifested in everyday contexts like bedrooms, offices, web pages, and music preferences. Gosling's environmental research, which is summarized in his book, "Snoop: What Your Stuff Says About You," is based on the idea that the spaces in which we live and work are rich with information about what we are like. His work has been widely covered in the media, including The New York Times, Psychology Today, NPR, Nightline, and Good Morning America. Gosling is the recipient of the American Psychological Association's Distinguished Scientific Award for Early Career Contribution.

Room: Crystal Ballroom

Viewer, Viewer, What do You See? An Overview of Factors Influencing Text Displays Such as Web Pages and PowerPoints

Lauren Scharff

Stephen F. Austin State University

Long-standing findings from vision science as well as more current findings regarding top-down processing lead to many predictions regarding text display readability and the ability of viewers to find pertinent information in such displays. This talk will highlight some of the science leading to recommendations for good design, as well as share some examples of poor design.

Dr. Lauren Scharff is a professor of Psychology at Stephen F. Austin State University, where she is also co-director of the Teaching Excellence Center. During the 2008-2009 academic year she is serving as a Distinguished Visiting Professor at the U. S. Air Force Academy in the Department of Behavioral Sciences and Leadership. Her main research areas include visual perception, text readability, and the human factors of web sites.

Chaired by: Randall Osborne

Room: Frontier

Each year, Psi Chi Honor Society in Psychology funds awards for undergraduate research. Come find out which students (who presented their posters or research talks at SWPA this year) have been awarded regional research awards. In addition, regional chapter awards will also be presented as well as recognitions for those chapters (in the region) who received model chapter status in 2008. Come celebrate the success of these find students and chapters and find out more about the many award and grant opportunities available through the Honor Society.
